Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

The Fort Russell neighborhood is a historical, residential area, containing several schools and churches, located directly east-northeast of the city of Moscow’s central business district. As stated in the original 1980 district nomination, it is “strongly homogeneous not only in use but in style, scale, and texture,” with texture referring to the building materials, primarily frame and brick, as well as the rows of deciduous trees found throughout the district.¹

The district features dwellings predominantly from the late-Victorian era into the early twentieth century, most notably representing the Queen Anne, Gothic Revival, Colonial Revival, English Cottage or Tudor, American Foursquare, and Bungalow styles and forms. Patterns of development within the neighborhood are strongly representative of the period, with the earlier, more extravagant dwellings being set near corners once having the entire block open behind them as one residential lot, with the more modest dwellings filling in between them over time. While scale varies, streetscapes are consistent.²

Several prominent community institutions are located within the expanded district, including the city library, John Russell Elementary, the old Moscow High School (1912 Building), and several churches including Moscow First Methodist Church, St. Mary's Catholic Church, St. Mark's Episcopal Church, and Unitarian Universalist Church, which are all notable within the district and the city for their distinctive architecture.

Both expanded boundaries and an expanded period of significance are included within this amendment. This amendment is necessary to include additional properties that belong within the Fort Russell neighborhood into the historic district itself, updating the somewhat arbitrary boundaries defined in the original nomination. The amendment also addresses an opportunity to update the historic contexts that were somewhat lacking in the original nomination, and in general, bring the nomination up to standard.

The expanded district contains approximately 87 acres with 243 total sites. Of those, 117 sites were included within the boundaries of the original NRHP district, and four sites have been listed to the NRHP individually.

The four buildings previously listed individually in the NRHP are: the Moscow Carnegie Library (Site 175, listed 1979); the W. J. McConnell House (Site 201, listed 1974); the old Moscow High School (Site 217, listed 1992); and Moscow First Methodist Church (Site 232, listed 1978).

Narrative Description

Location & Setting

Within the City of Moscow itself, the topography is generally level, most notably in the central business district. The rolling hills of the Palouse are evident in the outlying and surrounding areas around the city, though some notable hills and slopes can be found particularly in the areas where the University of Idaho and the Fort Russell Historic District are located.

The Fort Russell Neighborhood Historic District is situated very centrally, bordering the central business district just to the east of Washington Street – a major north-south thoroughfare in downtown Moscow. The neighborhood is within walking distance of the central business district.

Streetscape & Landscape

Within the expanded district, the streetscapes exhibit a consistent character with setbacks and rhythm highly representative of a residential neighborhood dating between the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries. The larger and more elaborate dwellings, many of which date earlier, are typically set further back on their larger lots than the more modestly sized dwellings, many of which date later and exhibit smaller lots and narrower setbacks. Dwellings face toward the streets running both east-west and north-south without any specific direction being predominant. Mature trees line many of the streets throughout the district, and front yards are generally manicured with lawns and mature, established vegetation.

The district is anchored on the southeast corner by the historic East City Park and along the southerly edge by East Third Street, a road that has historically provided not only a physical but social and developmental boundary to the Fort Russell neighborhood. Modern development has occurred outside the northeast boundaries of the expanded district, providing a division between the established historical areas and more recently developed blocks. Institutional buildings provide anchors along the west and southwestern boundaries, including Fort Russell Elementary, the city library housed in a Carnegie Library building, and the old Moscow High School.

District Development

Development within the Fort Russell Neighborhood Historic District followed a number of national and regional trends, and developed overall along very similar lines as the city's central business district, which was listed to the NRHP in 2004 as the Moscow Downtown Historic District.

Like Moscow's downtown, the Fort Russell neighborhood began developing during the last few decades of the nineteenth century, with the earliest dwelling dating to 1875 according to City of Moscow GIS property data. A total of 59 of the 243 total sites, nearly one full quarter (24%) within the district's expanded boundaries date prior to 1900, with construction and commerce slowing nationally during the mid- to late-1890s as a result of the national financial crash that hit in 1893. Once construction began again, around the turn of the century, the neighborhood experienced a major boom with approximately 13% dating to the single decade between 1900 and 1910 at which time Moscow was growing rapidly as a regional commercial center. Approximately 18% of the buildings within the expanded district were then built between 1911 and 1920 as the city continued to grow steadily, another 14% between 1921 and 1930, and finally 20% going up between 1931 and 1940 indicating that residential growth continued at a higher rate than commercial growth during the Great Depression years of the 1930s during which only three commercial structures were built in the downtown district. The remaining 11% is made up of 26 post-1940 dwellings scattered throughout the neighborhood.

Contributing Building Criteria

All of the general characteristics found within the district in the original 1980 nomination still remain today. Many of the individual dwellings have undergone alterations since the time of the original nomination, however, the overall fabric and character of the district remains, and representation of the period of significance is readily evident. For the most part, alterations have not compromised the buildings' original form, nor has it reduced the integrity of location, setting, design, feeling, or association for the individual resources or for the district as a whole.

The district still very strongly represents the late-Victorian and early-twentieth-century eras, as stated in the original nomination, and the dwellings associated with these periods are still very much representative of their periods. In addition, the district itself appears to retain strong

Fort Russell Neighborhood Historic District
(Boundary Increase & Additional Documentation)

Name of Property

County and State

integrity of location, setting, design, feeling, and association. The individual resources and other physical and visible features continue to represent the district as defined in the original nomination.

Those buildings recommended as contributing within this amendment retain historical integrity. Contributing buildings are generally those that relate to the expanded period of significance, continue to represent their original style and/or form, and also convey a general sense of simply fitting into the character of the Fort Russell neighborhood. Change over time does not diminish a building's integrity or its ability to contribute within the district, if overall, as outlined by the Moscow Historic Preservation Commission, it appears that it would still remain recognizable to someone who may have lived in the house prior to 1940.

- Alterations or material changes do not necessarily reduce a building's integrity as long as replacement or nonhistoric materials are compatible in appearance for what would have been appropriate to the original period, or if the form remains easily recognizable and highly representative of the original construction despite the removal or replacement of original details or ornamentation.
- Fenestration should not be altered nor openings covered over.
- Additions or alterations to a building's form or footprint may not reduce its integrity given the historical building and original form/footprint remain dominant. Examples may include nonhistoric dormers compatible in scale, massing and style; additions that do not disrupt the wall plane of the primary façade; or additions that do not overwhelm the footprint or disrupt the setback or rhythm characteristic within the site's setting.

Those sites deemed noncontributing are simple unable to strongly enough represent their original periods and/or any distinct historical period of change over time. Through the removal of historic fabric and/or character, some of these properties no longer relate to or continue to represent the recommended historic contexts or the recommended period of significance.

Inventory of Resources

In the following inventory, each principal site is identified by a number that locates it on the attached project mapping. The sites have been numbered on the map top-to-bottom and left-to-right like reading a book. Sources used for dating purposes include a range of Sanborn maps as well as property tax and GIS data provided by both the city and county.

All entries are categorized as contributing (C) or non-contributing (NC) to the significance of the district in Table 1 following, based on a big picture look at the district as a whole. The information in the first column of the following table includes:

- Site #, the number of this site on the map within this nomination
- Address

- Owner information as noted in city and county parcel / GIS records (as provided March 2015)
- Date of construction
- Previous district status, notes the status in the original 1980 nomination with the site # from the original nomination following a comma (N/A if not included within the 1980 nomination, being located in the current expanded boundaries)
- DoE, determination of eligibility for the current amendment

As a note, in the original 1980 NRHP nomination, several categories were included for the status of the sites, defined as follows for clarification purposes:

- NC - Compatible: This category was utilized for buildings neither individually eligible nor contributing within the district. Some were buildings that may have been age-eligible, but had been altered too much to contribute, nevertheless retaining visual compatibility through their massing and setback, which was still characteristic of the neighborhood and thus being deemed compatible. The second group in this category included buildings that had not reached the 50-year age mark, but were compatible in their scale, setback, material, and/or setting. A number of the buildings deemed age-ineligible may now be considered eligible since over thirty years have passed since the original nomination was prepared.
- NC - Intrusion: This category identified buildings that created actual visual intrusions, “breaking the continuity of the historic streetscape.”³ There were seven buildings identified with this status, including three “conspicuously altered early houses and four modern ranch-style houses.”⁴
- Contributing: The original nomination simply defined the contributing category as those properties identified neither as compatible nor intrusive, meaning that they were considered individually eligible for the NRHP or “positively contribute as integral parts of the district.”⁵

The central entry porch features a hip roof with exposed rafter tails, wide eaves, large square posts, and pilasters. At the second story of the façade are two sets of six-over-one paired windows. The first floor is sheathed in clapboards with a slight flare, while wood shingles cover the second story. A hip-roof dormer with a single small window is centered above the façade. Simple Craftsman-style trim surround the door and windows. Roofs are hipped with wide, open eaves and exposed rafter tails. A brick, shouldered chimney is located at the south elevation, and another small chimney pierces the main roof. At the rear is an enclosed porch. The addition features a hip-roof bay window at the first floor and a pair of six-over-one windows at the second story, an integral porch at the rear entrance, and materials that mimic the original. A small single-car garage is behind the dwelling. The original nomination states that this is “another Butterfield house” (Wright, 10).

It has an irregular plan that was created by alterations in 1909. A large, shingled dormer on the façade features a pair of double-hung windows with a triangular window with small diamond panes. A full-width porch spans the façade. The main entry contains a set of doors with beveled-glass. Decorative wood trim flanks the doors and the transom above. At the north and the south elevations are large, shingled, hip-roof dormers with aluminum slider windows. Also found at the north elevation is a shingled, sleeping porch above a portecochere supported atop three large square columns on coursed ashlar-faced concrete-block piers.. The water table of the sleeping porch flares. A steeply pitched hip roof covers the rear porch on the west elevation. At the south elevation, eave brackets can be seen below the large dormer. Drop siding envelopes the house, while lap siding sheaths the porch surround and wood shingles wrap both the dormers and the sleeping porch. A variety of windows can be found on the residence, including: historic wood-sash, multi-diamond pane-over-single pane, double-hung, diamond pane fixed, one-over-one double-hung, and fixed picture. The dwelling features a wide fascia, corner boards and classical wood trim around doors and windows. Coursed ashlar, concrete block, and rubble foundations can be found. Site #: 13 604 East C Street Owner: Jayne Eliza Mahle 1900 Previous District Status: C, 49 DoE: C		This is a one-and-one-half story Queen Anne dwelling oriented to the south. The steeply pitched roof is cross gabled and sheathed in composition shingles. The residence features a T-shaped plan with a two-story rear addition. The roof is pierced by a brick, double-flue chimney and modern skylights. The main cross gables have full-height windows through the gable ends, breaking the cornice. In the gable ends are diamond and fish scale shingles and large scroll-cut brackets supporting the cornice break. Wood drop siding covers the exterior and simple trimmed capitals top the corner boards. The original portion of the residence has a parged stone foundation while the porch at the east elevation and the addition sit on concrete blocks. At the southwest corner of the façade, a pair of round arches grace the shed- roofed main entrance springing from a single turned post to matching pilasters. At the southeast corner, a porch within the ell of the crossing gable covers a secondary entrance. Many of the original windows are present at the first floor, however the second story and the addition feature replacement windows.

Site #: 14 616 East C Street Owner: Mary Blanton ca. 1900 Previous District Status: NC (compatible), 47 DoE: C		This is a ca. 1900 dwelling updated with simplified Tudor detailing. The façade has a dominant front gable with varied eave-line heights and two side-gabled wings: a single story to the west, and a two-story to the east, with a large, brick, single-shouldered chimney. The roof has minimal eaves. The first floor exterior walls are covered in lap siding with corner boards while shingles cover the second story. The windows are double-hung, wood sash. At the second story they are six-over-nine and six-over-six, and nine-over-nine on the lower level. Shutters flank the windows on the façade. The main entrance features a shallow crown supported on simple pilasters framing the glazed wood panel. The foundation is concrete block and a large contemporary multi-level deck can be found at the rear.
Site #: 15 622 East C Street Owner: Steven McGeehan 1910 Previous District Status: NC (compatible), 46 DoE: NC		This is an altered, front-gable Queen Anne-styled residence. The dwelling features nonhistoric gabled dormers with modern windows and arch-top windows in the gable ends on both the west and east elevations, centered between hip-roofed dormers. A variety of patterned shingles decorate all the gable ends. The house is clad in cedar shingles. A full-width porch wraps around the façade and extends along the west elevation. It features a front-gabled peak with a sunburst decoration centered over the front entry door atop the hip roof, and original French secondary entry doors from the porch at the west elevation. The square porch posts exhibit wood trim and small corner brackets. Two bays are found at the east elevation; the bay nearest the front is historic, while the northernmost bay is contemporary and features new windows, a poured concrete foundation, and boxed eaves under a low hip roof.

Site #: 21 325 North Polk Street Owner: Evan Wilson 1911 Previous District Status: C, 35 DoE: C		The Mark P. Miller House, also known as the Gingerbread house or the House of Seven Gables, is a large, two-and-one-half-story, eclectic Craftsman mansion with Swiss Chalet style detailing. It has a front-facing gable roof, large dormers over both side elevations, and three staggered gable-roof projections on the second level of the façade. A partial-width porch on the façade features supports of blonde and red brick piers with cast stone caps. The wood entry door has an inset panel and beveled glazing, and is flanked by a pair of beveled glass sidelights. Door hardware is original. At both sides of the entry is a band of triplet wood-sash, double-hung windows with stained-glass uppers over a large single pane. The gables have half-timbering and detailed bargeboards. A porte-cochere rests on supports that match the porch and extend up over the roof, which is hipped with a nearly flat pitch. It has open eaves with ornately sawn rafter tails. The space between the piers at the north elevation has been filled in with brick and two square windows with small lights. At the south elevation, four wood-sash, double-hung windows are set in a cantilevered square bay window with flared water table topped by a balconet, west of a tall, blonde brick, shouldered chimney with inset and projecting details of darker brick and a crenelated top. A forty-eight-over-one window is found east of the chimney; a second window of this size can be found on the dormer over the porch. A second blonde brick chimney with similar detailing exits the roof near the ridge of the rear gable. Other details include deep, open bracketed eaves with detailed rafter tails, and ornate scroll-sawn knee braces and brackets. The house is clad in wood drop siding that flares above the foundation. All windows are original except a few at the basement. Entry doors have been installed into window openings at both the second and third floors on the rear, and a spiral staircase, balcony and straight-run stair have been installed on the back. A small gable roof shed with painted OSB walls, half-timbering, open eaves, and rafter tails is also found at the site.

Site #: 39 418 East B Street Owner: Rebecca Hill 1890 Previous District Status: C, 26 DoE: C		The Dr. Gritman House faces south toward B Street, west of VanBuren. It is an asymmetrical, two-story, frame dwelling with a turret on the southeast corner and an open porch curving around the southeast corner. The dwelling features hipped, gabled, jerkinhead, and conical rooflines and has two, exterior brick chimneys on the east and west sides. The house has large, sixteen-over-one, wood-sash windows, and a multi-light wood door with sidelights that leads to a small second level balcony. A pair of vinyl windows is found above the main entry, while small, square windows surround the turret. The porch is supported by wood posts with a small gable above the entry, which contains a single-light door, multi-light transom, and narrow, multi-light sidelights. Scrolled brackets can be found in several locations where slight overhangs shelter the first story windows. The house is covered in wood shingles, and features a single-story portion at the rear.

Site #: 40 424 East B Street Owner: Bensen Family Trust 1888 Previous District Status: C, 27 DoE: C		The R. H. Barton House is located on the northwest corner of B and VanBuren Streets. It is a two-story, cross-gabled, L-plan, frame dwelling with a slightly shorter, two-story, cross-gabled addition on the rear. Though it appears the original dwelling is an L-plan, the rear addition creates an overall footprint of a T-plan. The original main entry is beneath a shed-roof porch on the south or façade elevation. Two more entries, also facing south are at the west and east ends of the rear addition. An enclosed, gable-roof extension is centered on the rear. A three-sided bay is centered on the forward extension of the original portion, with another on the east elevation. The house is covered in vinyl siding and has vinyl windows and replacement doors. The dwelling is set back within a large corner lot and rests on stone.
Site #: 41 310 North VanBuren Street Owner: 310 North Van Buren LLC 1888 Previous District Status: C, 31 DoE: C		The original nomination identifies this as the Colonel Frank H. Barton House,. It is a two-story, multi-residence unit, with original full-height projections on the north and south sides and northeast corner. A hip-roof porch wraps around the southwest corner and was present by 1928; it appears to have been originally constructed partially enclosed as it currently appears. The deeply inset entry door is a wood paneled door with an oval window, eight-light sidelights, and a nine-light transom. The porch roof is set on square posts atop an apron wall. The exterior is clad in wood shingles. All of the windows have been replaced with vinyl sashes. At the southeast corner of the site is a side-gable, partially enclosed, raised barn built between 1904 and 1928. It features roughhewn wood clapboards and a metal roof.

Site #: 42 304 North VanBuren Street Owner: John Sullivan 1932 Previous District Status: NC (compatible), 30 DoE: C		Site 42 is a one-story, T-shape, cross-gable roof, Tudor-inspired dwelling. It is oriented west, facing North VanBuren Street. The dwelling exhibits a dark brick veneer with brick window sills. The façade features wide, dark painted wood planks in the gable end above a large, wood-sash, twenty-light, fixed window with minimal trim and a heavy wood lintel. A wide, brick, exterior chimney is centrally located on the east elevation. North of the front gable is a low-pitched, shed-roof porch atop wood posts with notched-in, slightly curved, wood brackets. A wood door with two, six-light windows and original hardware is found in the entry. Casement windows with heavy wood lintels are also found on the dwelling. A shingled, shed-roof addition is found at the rear. A wooden gate is set between concave-arched brick walls attached between the dwelling and the garage. A single-car garage with a wood-shake covered hip roof is also at the site. It is clad in wood shingles with irregular edges and has a metal roll-up door.

Site #: 65 922 East B Street Owner: Jason Dearien 1929 Previous District Status: n/a DoE: C	 The photographs show the exterior of a blue house with a side-gable roof, two dormers, and a garage. The house is surrounded by trees and a lawn.	Site 65 is an early, Cape Cod dwelling. It is a one-and-one-half-story, side-gable roof, frame residence with two gable-roof dormers over the façade and a small, single-car garage attached to the west side elevation. A small, gable-roof, covered patio is found on the northeast corner; according to Sanborn maps this feature was original or was a very early addition to the dwelling. A shed-roof dormer spans the entire width over the rear elevation. A brick chimney is off-centered on the ridgeline. The dwelling is covered in raked, wood shingles and retains six-over-six and eight-over-eight, double-hung, wood-sash windows. Many of the windows are flanked by wood shutters. The main entry contains a wood paneled door flanked by fluted pilasters beneath a wide entablature with crown molding above.

A brick chimney is visible on the side. A large, white garage is attached to the rear of the property.	Site 92 is located on the southwest corner of B and Lincoln Streets. It is a one-and-one-half-story, L-shape, frame dwelling with hip-roof dormers over all four elevations. A recessed, L-shape porch is found around the northwest corner, and is supported by square posts with decorative molding around the top, that are set on an apron covered in wood siding. The house features horizontal boards, weatherboard, and both square and sawtooth shingle imbrication. The corners of the dormers exhibit square corner posts with the same decorative molding as the porch. Wood-sash windows remain, as does a transom above the main entry. A single-shouldered, exterior, brick chimney is found on the east elevation, while another brick stack pierces the roof at the rear of the house. A small, single-story, shed roof, enclosed porch is found on the rear. A large, hip-roof, frame garage is found behind the dwelling. It features drop-wood siding, and horizontal sliding wood doors.

Site #: 129 119 North Adams Street Owner: City of Moscow 1928 Previous District Status: C, 5 DoE: C		This is the John Russell Elementary School, or the Russell School. The original portion of the building is a rectangular central block, flanked by small wings. The building is situated diagonally crossing the northeast corner at the corner of Adams and A Street. A rectangular wing was added at the west end of the building parallel to A Street between 1928 and 1962. The building features a raked brick veneer, and a poured-concrete foundation. It exhibits elements of the Collegiate Gothic style, including cast stone surrounds around the entries, with pilasters exhibiting peaked stones at the top, and Gothic arches over both the cast stone and brick entries. The building has soldier course brick lintels and sills. A soldier course of blonde bricks runs above the second-story windows. The windows throughout have been replaced with metal sashes, with the top of the window openings being filled in. The addition exhibits features similar to the original, except that the veneer is laid in a six-row common bond. The building's doors have been replaced with metal frame doors, retaining the peaked transom windows. A large, brick chimney extends over the center of the roof in the center of the original building. The roofline is capped in metal. A nonhistoric, single-story, prefabricated portable building is located west of the building. Two doors on the east side are accessible via a wooden stairway and ramp.

The entry is recessed behind a large, arched opening with an additional parapet. The entry contains a nonhistoric door but retains sidelights and transom windows. Two small, arched windows flank the entry porch while two very large single-light, wood-sash windows with fanlights above are found on each side of the façade. All of the arched windows exhibit large, soldier-course brick arches above. Two large windows are also found on the south elevation. The windows exhibit narrow stone sills, which continue around the building. Between the sills and the basement foundation, the bricks run in bands with a narrow band of recessed brick between. The roof is covered in tile. The building is set on a mortared, stone block foundation with paired, three-light, wood-sash windows in the basement level toward the north and paired, three-over-one, wood-sash windows toward the south. A basement entry with a flat porch roof is found on the south side. On the rear of the building is a small, flat-roof, brick addition constructed in the 1930s according to the previous survey form. The addition exhibits a similar light-colored brick as the original building, as well as stone sills and lintels at the windows. The rear of this addition is finished in red brick with four recessed portions with corbelling above and pilasters between. On the north side of the original building, is a large, single-story, flat-roof 1980s addition. It is

The building is now accessed via this addition. The interior of the original portion of the building is quite intact, retaining woodwork and molding, two fireplaces, columns, two round rooms in the front corners, and two small, original washrooms tucked between the rounded front rooms and the main foyer. It was listed individually to the NRHP in 1979. Despite the large addition, the original portion of the building with its 1930s addition appears to remain eligible for continued inclusion in the NRHP. The 1980s addition, though compatible, is notably different and was designed with a simple and clean appearance so that it does not compete with the more ornate original building. It is recessed from the façade of the original building at the point where they are connected, only extending forward at an angle as it proceeds away from it. Despite the additions, the original building, both on the exterior and in the interior, is remarkably intact and retains high levels of historical integrity.

A memorial honoring the local veterans of numerous wars is present in the west end of the park, while a small brick archway memorializing World War I was added to the park's southwest corner in 1923. The Kaufman Fountain featuring a plaque noting the fountain's dedication to pioneer residents William and Bertha Kaufman, is located near the center of the park. It is a round, concrete fountain base with a concrete urn decorated with swags. The fountain now contains flowers. A plaque shows the fountain was added to the park in 1925. This park has been updated with the modern amenities expected within a city park, but still retains its original form, location, and overall character as a turn-of-the-century, City Beautiful-era park. The changes affect the historical character minimally; its strongest elements of significance are tied to its function and its place in the social and historic contexts of the city. This park has also affected the residential lots surrounding it, a characteristic that remains today.

Site #: 201 110 South Adams Street Owner: Latah County Historical Society 1886 Previous District Status: n/a DoE: C Previously Listed to the NRHP: 11/21/1974		This is the W. J. McConnell House, 1886, currently housing the McConnell Mansion Museum for the Latah County Historical Society. It was listed individually to the NRHP in 1974. It is a two-story, T-plan, frame dwelling with a hip roof and featuring a mix of Victorian-era styles including Eastlake, Italianate and Gothic-revival.. Two, full-height, three-sided bays extend out on the south elevation while one extends on the west elevation. These bays exhibit very steeply-pitched gable roofs with extensive ornamentation including detailed brackets, sawtooth imbrication, dentils, and other carved wood ornamentation. Similar brackets and carved wood ornamentation can be found throughout the dwelling. A partial-width, single-story porch is found on the west elevation, while a narrow entry door is found on the south. A second-level entry is found on the rear, accessible by an exterior staircase that extends above a single-story sun porch. The dwelling is covered in aluminum siding and retains double-hung, wood-sash windows. Some small, stained-glass windows also remain. A small, gable-roof, frame shed or garage is found to the rear. It is covered in clapboards. The McConnell Mansion appears eligible to remain listed individually on the NRHP. The building retains integrity of design, workmanship, feeling, association, and many of its materials and continues to serve as a notable and significant Victorian-era dwelling in this area.

The façade features fish-scale, wood shingle imbrication and a colored, multi-light, wood-sash window in the closed, front-facing gable. Two large, twenty-four-light, wood-sash windows are located flanking the porch at the first level. The porch was altered to a Tudor-style roofline that creates an enclosed entry with a multi-light window in the exterior wall and shelters the entry door. The tall, main roof has four, hipped-roof dormers with fish scale shingles; two on the north slope and two on the south. Each dormer contains a single, vinyl window. A central chimney pierces the roof at the ridge. The foundation is rusticated concrete block, the walls are clad in wood drop siding and the roof is composition shingle. Windows are original with classical wood surrounds. Also on this site at the rear of the property is a side gabled, single-car garage. The garage features wood drop siding, composition shingle roof, a small attic access hatch, and a wood-sided sliding barn-style door. Though the façade of this dwelling has been altered with a Tudor porch, this change is now historic itself and did not diminish the dwelling's original form, style or most character-defining features.

The façade features a tall, steeply pitched, front-facing gable with a six-over-one, wood-sash window in its stuccoed peak and a wood-sash, triple window below. Another smaller, front-facing entry gable projects out from the large gable. The entry gable has varied height eaves, a round-arched opening and a round-arched wood door. In the south wall of the vestibule is a small, six-light, wood-sash window. The façade also features three hip-roof dormers with paired, wood-sash casement windows and a large, hip-roof, stuccoed bay window, with six, twenty-one light, leaded-glass windows. Added at the south elevation is a stepped-back, side-gabled addition clad in stucco. The north elevation features two, paired, diamond-pane, leaded-glass, casement windows that flank the projecting chimney base. The roofline steps down at the central chimney and continues north to another chimney. Both chimneys are double-flue, brick, interior chimneys. The foundation is concrete and the roof is composition shingle. Also at this site are a contemporary, shingled, two-car, side-gable garage and an historic, single-car garage with shingled walls and a cedar-shingled hip roof. Also located at this is a metal-roofed, pre-fabricated shed.

It is an asymmetrical Gothic Revival style church exhibiting a mortared stone exterior and concrete-over-brick surrounding the Gothic-arched windows, entries and oculus window found on the south elevation. The windows retain ornate stained-glass wood sashes. A rounded turret is found on the southeast corner, while a square clock tower rises from the southwest corner. The tower exhibits Gothic-arched vents and clocks on all four sides. An extension with a gable-roof parapet is found on the south side and buttressed pilasters are found throughout. A ca. 1950s addition, exhibiting red brick on the north elevation and stone similar to the original building on the south elevation, is found west of the original building. It is similar in appearance to the original building facing busy East Third Street. A windowed bay extends from the main and upper level of this addition on the south side above a recessed basement level entry. Some of the windows contain leaded-glass. Another addition is found on the far west of the building. It is mid-century modern in appearance, exhibiting a stone or faux stone veneer and ribbons of metal-sash windows with grey colored panels between. Its north wall is plain with small metal-sash windows. A small, gable-roof, frame shed is found at the northwest corner of the site, sheathed in clapboards with exposed rafter tails. Despite the additions, the original portion remains a highly intact, significant architectural example of its era.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Fort Russell Neighborhood Historic District was originally listed to the NRHP in 1980, significant under Criteria A and C, for both its historical and architectural significance representing a “rich display of early residential architecture... significant as well for the historical connections between the houses and many of the people who built the town.”⁶ It remains significant today under Criterion A for its associations with events, under the category of community planning and development, and under Criterion C as an embodiment of the architecture during the period of significance. The neighborhood retains a strong historical character and continues to represent its period as an intact historic district within the city of Moscow. Notwithstanding the presence of some modern buildings the district today retains integrity of location, design, setting, feeling, and association, and though some changes have been made over time to individual dwellings, overall integrity of workmanship and materials is present.

The expanded period of significance for the district begins in 1875, the earliest recorded construction date for any resources within the district boundaries, and extends through to 1940. The district exists as an early residential neighborhood with strong ties to the city’s earliest pioneers and businessmen who were responsible for settling, establishing and growing the city and its economy. Post-1940 buildings are scattered in relatively small numbers within the proposed boundaries (accounting for just 11% of buildings within the expanded boundaries). Though modern construction begins to represent a different character moving beyond the period of significance, the presence of these buildings does not detract from the district’s strong character and identity as a significant neighborhood reflecting Moscow’s early growth.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

In the area of architecture, the Fort Russell neighborhood is significant for its residential, educational, and religious buildings and its overall built character, which correspond to the first several decades of the city’s growth and development. Both the high-style architecture of the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries, including Victorian styles such as Queen Anne, as well as the more modest, accessible architecture of the 1920s and 1930s, such as Bungalows and English Cottage or Tudor Revivals, are found within the Fort Russell neighborhood. Though the architecture within the district varies resulting in an eclectic collection of buildings, the architectural forms and styles within the neighborhood are directly representative of national architectural trends for each decade during the period of significance, as well as representing the economic, social, and demographic patterns of city of Moscow itself.

The Fort Russell neighborhood's significance in the area of community planning and development is similar to what has been outlined for architecture, following both national and local trends related to economics and community development. The various additions within the district were platted during the city's earliest days, being laid out generally in a grid pattern with spacious lots intended to serve as an escape from the city's bustling town center. Over time, many of the lots were subdivided and filled in with smaller, more modest dwellings on smaller lots during the 1920s and 1930s accommodating the city's growing middle-class population while continuing to support the entrepreneurs that helped build it up originally. The planning and development evident within the Fort Russell neighborhood is also reflective of its central location, containing not only residential development but also schools, churches, and a major city park – all woven in to accommodate the needs of this diverse neighborhood as well as the needs of the city's general population who could access this area easily since it lies within walking distance to the city center.

DEVELOPMENTAL HISTORY/HISTORIC CONTEXT:

Location, Prehistory & Early Development, to 1870

Moscow is located in the northern Idaho Panhandle in Latah County. The county is bordered on the west by Washington State, on the south and east by Nez Perce and Clearwater counties, and on the north and east by Benewah and Shoshone Counties. Latah County contains 1,077 square miles with nine incorporated communities, of which Moscow is by far the largest containing a population of over 20,000 with the next biggest community having less than 1,000 people⁷. Moscow is situated near the eastern edge of the world famous farming region known as the Palouse or the Palouse Prairie. Geographically, the Palouse is described as a distinct ecosystem found along the easternmost edge of the Columbia Plateau, north to Cheney, Washington, and bordered on the east by the forests of northern Idaho and on the south by the Snake and Clearwater Rivers.⁸

Due to massive prehistoric lava flows, basalt was widely distributed over this region. Over time, glaciers from the north and massive floods from Lake Missoula broke down the basalt, moved layers of soil and created the deep canyons of central Washington's channeled scablands. Winds transported fine silt loam, known as loess, and ash from numerous volcanic eruptions and deposited them into dune-like hills. This fine, fertile soil supports the successful Palouse farmlands, but is susceptible to erosion.⁹ Prior to settler cultivation, typical vegetation on the Palouse prairie included perennial bunchgrasses such as prairie junegrass, Idaho fescue and bluebunch wheatgrass, shrubs such as wild rose and snowberry, mosses and lichens, and many Native large game animals include white-tailed deer, mule deer, elk, and moose.

Contemporary Moscow, known as Tatkinmah by the Nez Perce, is within the traditional territories of a number of nearby Indian tribes. The Palouse lived south near the Snake River, the Spokane Tribe were located to the northwest, the Coeur d'Alene Tribe to the north and northeast, and the Nez Perce to the southeast in central Idaho. The area around present-day Moscow was primarily used as a travel route for trade, for hunting small and big game and upland birds, and for springtime gathering of camas, bitterroot, balsamroot, and wild onions.¹¹

Contact with Europeans and Americans began when fur traders traveled through the region looking for fur-bearing animals and navigable rivers for transport in the early 1800s.¹² Trading posts were being constructed at this time across the Northwest, one of the closest being Spokane House (1810-26), northwest of present-day Spokane. Another was for a short time located on the Clearwater River, near present-day Lewiston, Idaho. Major Indian trails were used by fur traders to travel across the region. The Greater Nez Perce Trail, which crossed the eastern border of Moscow, and the Red Wolf Trail, located approximately four miles east of present-day Moscow, were two such trails.¹³

European and American settlers began heading into the region in the late 1840s for mining, which increased tensions with the Indians and culminated in a push for adoption of Treaties with the tribes and a series of wars including the Yakima War from 1855-56, the Coeur d'Alene or Spokane War in 1858, and the Nez Perce War of 1877. Most tribal nations had been forced onto reservations by the late 1870s. Around the same time, an expansion of cattle grazing in Walla Walla Country brought additional settlers into the area. Additionally, the lack of available farmlands in the Willamette Valley of Oregon and the promise of gold mining, directed settlers towards North Idaho and the fertile lands around Moscow.¹⁴

No architectural resources have survived in the Fort Russell Historic District neighborhood from the prehistoric or early European-American contact periods. Archaeological resources from these periods, however, are likely to yield valuable information regarding Native American and other residents of the area. Therefore, if resources are discovered, they have the potential to be considered significant under Criterion D.

Early Settlement – Development, Commerce, Transportation & Education, 1871 – 1890

The city of Moscow itself was settled in 1871, when the first Euro-American inhabitants who grazed their livestock on the fertile grasslands and harvested the abundant timber began constructing permanent buildings. Among the earliest homesteaders who came through Walla Walla were Almon Asbury Lieuallen, his wife, Sarah, and his brother Noah, along with about 20 other families including John Russell, James Deakin, Henry McGregor, George W., W.R. and Millie Tomer, William, J. S. and E. B. Frazier, W. J. Hamilton, William and Priscilla Taylor, Murdock Cameron, Angus and Donald McKenzie, J. T. Taylor, David Allen, Henry Trimble, and L. H. Collins.¹⁵ It was A. Lieuallen, Russell, Deakin and McGregor, whose land claims met at the intersection of Main and Sixth Streets, who donated 30 acres of their land for the city center. These earliest settlers also established a small cemetery.¹⁶

The town was originally called Paradise¹⁷ with the establishment of the first Post Office in 1873. It was also known alternately as Hog Heaven and Palouse Valley until 1877, when it finally became Moscow. The name Moscow was reportedly suggested by Samuel Miles Neff, owner of the first general store in which the first Post Office was located, whose hometown was near Moscow, Pennsylvania.¹⁸ In 1875, Almon Lieuallen opened a general store at the corner of First and Main Streets, on a section of a claim he purchased from Samuel Neff.¹⁹ By the following year, the Post Office was operating out of this building and Lieuallen was Postmaster.

In response to widespread fear during the War of 1877, local residents built three forts around Moscow: Fort Howard, northeast of town; Fort Crumerine, east of town along modern-day Sixth Street; and Fort Russell in the vicinity of Howard and Lincoln, and B and D Streets. Fort Russell was a palisade or stockade, constructed of locally harvested logs near John Russell's home on his land and located near the residence of Charles and Julia Moore.²⁰ Also in this same year, adding to the growing success of the town, both a dentist and a doctor located their practices in Moscow, the Moscow Argus began printing, and the first permanent sawmill opened.²¹

Moscow continued to grow expansively during the next few years. "In 1878, surveyor O.L. Wolford platted Main and Washington Streets from A to Sixth Street."²² Entrepreneurs William J. McConnell and Michael J. Shields arrived in Moscow in that same year and each established businesses on Main Street. McConnell partnered with James Maguire to open a successful general merchandise store, and Shields, a building contractor, was selling stoves, hardware, wagons and carriages from his farm implement store by 1879. Fred Zumhoff, blacksmith, and Major Marion Collins were instrumental in the formation of the volunteer fire department. By 1880, Moscow's population was 300, and by the following year the town contained three general merchandise stores, two hotels, a hardware store, butcher shops, saloons, blacksmiths, and farm implement stores.²³ The Peerless Flour Mill was established by Charles and Miles Moore in 1881 and the Zion Baptist Church opened its doors. 1882 saw the first brewery founded and the next year, the Moscow Mirror, began printing.

By 1882, much of the land north of Moscow's central business district, in and around the current Fort Russell Historic District, had been surveyed and platted by some of the city's earliest homesteaders and entrepreneurs. These include Russell Addition, 1881; Russell's Second Addition, filed at an unknown date during the 1880s; Park Addition, 1882; Elm Addition, 1890; and Orchard Home Addition, 1891. Other platted additions that are partially included in the Fort Russell Historic District are Beagle's Addition, and Frye's First and Second Additions.

The first rail line reached Moscow in 1885, when the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company completed its line from Colfax into town. This gave the residents a much easier mode of travel and increased farmers' ability to transport crops to markets in Walla Walla and further on to Portland. This line later became the Oregon-Washington Railroad and Navigation Company and then the Union Pacific. The Northern Pacific (later the Burlington-Northern) laid tracks from Spokane into town in 1890. Additionally, the railroad companies advertised across the country touting the availability of fertile farmlands in the Palouse as a way to increase business. This advertising had the added benefit of bringing settlers to Moscow and the region.

Moscow was incorporated in 1887. The following year, local forces began pushing for a division of Nez Perce County, in which it was located at the time, because the trip to the county seat of Lewiston was difficult and dangerous. Local politicians turned to Congress and successfully lobbied for the creation of Latah County with Moscow as the county seat; it was the only county in the nation created by an act of Congress. Moscow quickly eclipsed the older settlement of Lewiston, which had been serving as a supply base for miners and farmers since the 1860s.²⁴ The Latah County Courthouse was constructed between 1888-89 on the block bounded by South Adams and South Van Buren, between East 5th and East 6th Streets. It was a brick, two-story symmetrical building with courtrooms on the second floor and offices and the jail on the first. This building was demolished when a new courthouse was built in 1958.

Another draw to the area occurred when Moscow secured the state land grant college. Local businessman William McConnell, along with Willis Sweet, founder of an early territorial newspaper, and Fred T. Dubois, a powerful politician living in eastern Idaho territory, worked together to write the act creating the University of Idaho, and in January of 1889, the territorial legislature declared Moscow would be the site of the university. Six months later, Idaho gained statehood. The master plan for the campus was originally designed by the Olmsted Brothers of Massachusetts, sons of Frederick Law Olmsted. The University opened its doors in 1892 with approximately 40 preparatory students and one professor in an empty, uncompleted wing of the main campus building, two-thirds of which was only a foundation. The University of Idaho was the state's only university for 71 years.

Just nine miles to the west of Moscow, the city of Pullman, Washington, another land grant university town, was going through similar growth and expansion that created a competitive atmosphere between the two towns.

During this period the town was growing and the economy was expanding – these changes are evident in the architecture of the city's commercial downtown as well as the earliest neighborhoods, including some areas in and around the Fort Russell Historic District where some of the city's early elite built their personal residences as reflections of their professional successes.

Associated Property Types

- Residential – Architectural types and forms/styles associated with this period include cross-gabled frame, Queen Anne, Vernacular, and Italianate. The street grid that survives today in the Fort Russell Historic District was conceived and laid out during this time period. A number of residential additions were platted and homeowners were beginning to construct their own private residences. Houses beyond the central business core were constructed on larger properties. Most of the dwellings were one-and-one-half- or two-stories with accompanying outbuildings, stables, and single-story sheds. Features such as earthen root cellars and private wells were scattered throughout the area. Many of Moscow's business owners built their homes throughout the Fort Russell Historic District neighborhood. Notable dwellings include:
 - William Kaufmann house (1885) (410 East B Street), a two-story, asymmetrical, Vernacular, frame dwelling with a front-facing jerkinhead gable and a double-gable roofline along its east elevation;
 - Henry Baker house (1884) (326 East A Street), a two-story, cross-gabled frame dwelling with bay window at the first level beneath a paired window in the gable end;
 - Dr. Gritman house (circa 1885-1890) (418 East B Street), an asymmetrical, two-story dwelling with a one-and-one-half story turret on the southeast corner with an open porch curving around it at the first level. The eclectic house features hipped, gabled, jerkinhead and conical rooflines with some Italianate-style scrolled brackets supporting narrow eaves;
 - William J. McConnell House (1886) (110 South Adams Street), a dwelling of the Victorian eclectic style with Gothic Revival, Eastlake and Italianate details including two-story bay windows with steeply-pitched gable roofs and extensive ornamentation such as brackets, sawtooth imbrication, dentils, and detailed trusses in the gable ends (NRHP listed, individually);

- R.H. Barton house (1888) (424 East B Street), a two-story, cross-gabled, L-plan frame dwelling with a slightly shorter, two-story, cross-gabled addition on the rear;
- Mason A. Cornwall house (1889) (308 S Hayes Street), a two-story, asymmetrical, Italianate dwelling with a scored stucco exterior imitating stone with quoins at the façade corners, ornate metal brackets supporting the eaves, and smooth concrete sills and lintels above the arched first floor windows and flat second story windows.
- Recreation – East City Park, platted 1882, is located southeast of the current Fort Russell Historic District and nearly centered within the Park Addition. Elite Moscow citizens Henry Baker, R.H. Barton, E.D. Boyer, Herbert Clark, William Simpson, C.A. Howard, Charles Moore, and Frank and John Paine combined to donate 6.7 acres between First and East Third Streets, and Monroe and Hayes Streets for a city park. F.E. Mix and his son William donated the first park trees, and by 1904 a park commission was formed and a city ordinance was passed for park maintenance. At first, the park was surrounded by contiguous fencing to keep out wandering livestock. Later the University of Idaho assisted with tree care and locals donated plant material.
- Educational – Schools have consistently been important buildings within the area in and around the Fort Russell Historic District. As early as 1871, Moscow’s first schoolhouse was occupied – it was a log building with a dirt floor. Later in 1883-84, on land that was donated by John Russell, a more substantial school, a two-story, wood frame building with a gable roof and cupola, was constructed to accommodate 120 students. Later still, in 1888-89 the Russell School was constructed on the block bordered by North Adams and North Jefferson, between East A and East First Streets.²⁵ It was a two-story, Italianate, wood frame school with a three-story central entry tower on the façade. The building was destroyed by fire in 1912 and is no longer extant.²⁶
- Ecclesiastical – Churches were prominent buildings around the Fort Russell neighborhood and there was a boom in their construction during the 1880s as more and more houses were constructed in the area. The First United Methodist Episcopal Church counted as its founding members several of the initial settlers to Moscow. They constructed a church during 1883-86, at East Sixth and Jefferson Streets. A Presbyterian church was built in 1885 and expanded in 1942. A Roman Catholic Church that is no longer extant today was built in 1886 near East First and Adams Street, and the Swedish Lutheran church on East Second and South Van Buren Streets was constructed in 1889 though that original building was replaced in 1905.

Statehood, Phase I (1890s – 1904) and Phase II (1904 – 1920)

By 1890, Moscow was home to more than 2,250 residents. The city was a center of trade, local government and higher education.²⁷ A city waterworks building had been constructed and about seven miles of iron water mains had been installed with water being pumped from two artesian wells. A fire on June 6, 1890 resulted in the loss of only eight commercial buildings in the downtown core due to the installation of the city's waterworks system.²⁸ The city's waterworks continued to grow until the Panic of 1893, but expansion of the system began again by the next decade.²⁹ By 1904 Moscow's population had grown to 5,000 taxing the old system, so a program of replacing the old iron water mains with new wooden ones began, and soon the system supported 52 double hydrants and water lines spread east into the Fort Russell neighborhood. In the same year, the fire department had three companies with 60 volunteers and three hose carts thus supporting the expanding city.³⁰

Local agriculture was also greatly impacted by the Panic of 1893. Early farmers grazed their cattle and hogs on camus, and they planted wheat, barley, oats, flax, lentils, peas and fruit. They sold their crops and animals to the Walla Walla markets.³¹ Adding to the devastating effects of the Panic was a massive wheat crop failure. This led to farmers losing their land, businesses closing and banks folding. Growth stalled. Within a decade, agriculture recovered helping to stabilize the local economy, and the promising timber industry began to cash in on the area's rich natural resource of white pine, said to have been the largest stand of white pine in the nation.³² Inventive blacksmiths, Cornelius Quesnell and Andrew Anderson with financial backing from Gainford Mix and Jerome J. Day, formed the Idaho National Harvester Company and between 1904 and the beginning of World War I, manufactured and sold their lightweight combine, the "Little Idaho."³³

The railroads continued to support Moscow. Construction of a new Northern Pacific (later the Burlington-Northern) line was completed between Moscow and Genesee and finally in 1898 extended to Lewiston. Additionally, a depot was built to handle both passengers and freight along the new line. The railroads supported a number of grain elevators and warehouses, and brought supplies to town.

By 1900, the University of Idaho boasted 29 instructors with an enrollment of 400, and was comprised of the College of Letters and Sciences, College of Agriculture, School of Applied Science, the preparatory school, and the agricultural experimental station on 90 acres near campus. The university received its funding from the Federal Government's Morrill and Hatch funds, and from state timber lands managed as an endowment for Idaho's schools. World War I saw a drop in enrollment at the University of Idaho, but by 1920-21, enrollment was up once again and dormitory and classroom construction increased.³⁴

Within the city's neighborhoods, changes were being made to enlarge some of the existing houses – porches were enclosed, small additions were constructed, and several second stories were added. Cellars, stables, wells and wood sheds abound. Very few new houses were built during the Panic of 1893, but more houses begin to be built farther east and south closer to East City Park – smaller more compact houses on smaller lots. Additionally, smaller houses were constructed either as infill on previously undeveloped lots, or on smaller lots as more of the larger original lots were further subdivided. Some original dwellings began to disappear along Washington Street in order to make way for commercial enterprises.³⁵

Like most cities across America, the financial Panic of 1893 devastated Moscow's economy, however, within 10 years after the panic, the city had gone from "poverty to affluence, from depression to prosperity."³⁶ Agriculture rebounded adding to the stabilization of the local economy, and the nascent timber industry began reap the benefits of the expanding white pine harvest.³⁷ During the first quarter of the twentieth century, Moscow continued to grow steadily, and although prosperous, many of the buildings and homes going up at this time were more modest than some from the original boom.

During the decades leading up to and directly following the turn of the twentieth century, advances in transportation and household technologies, as well as cultural social changes, were great affecting residential development and the suburbanization of the then open landscape on the edges of the nation's cities.³⁸

Around the turn of the twentieth century, this process typically involved small subdivisions or plats that expanded as additional parcels were subdivided and the existing grid of city streets extended.³⁹ Early suburban homes during this period originated as "rural villa[s] for the fairly well-to-do family" located on the edge of the crowded, industrial, commercial centers of existing cities.⁴⁰ These dwellings often exhibited Romantic styles such as Italiante, Tudor Revival, Swiss, or Gothic Revival and were often complex and eclectic in their final appearance, unique from the designs of their neighbors. They tended to be spacious, set on lots comparatively large to later subdivided lots, providing a sort of relief from the crowded, noisy and dirty commercial or industrial cores, despite their relatively close proximity that was still dictated by the somewhat limited and slow modes of transportation at that time.

It was also around the turn of the twentieth century that the City Beautiful movement emphasized “a synthesis of aesthetics and functionalism.” While these principles were applied in a grandiose manner in many of the nation’s larger and wealthier cities, more modest western cities like those in Idaho applied City Beautiful aesthetics where boulevards and cross streets “following the city’s grid, let to quiet neighborhoods of modest homes built by local builders”; it is this very character that is evident in the Fort Russell area of Moscow.⁴¹

Associated Property Types

- Residential – During this time period, construction of residences within and around the Fort Russell Historic District picked up speed. They were built increasingly farther out from the business core, filling previously platted yet still empty plots. Non-residential enterprises were disappearing from this area, as commercial construction focused more tightly along Main and Washington. For the first time, older “decrepit” dwellings were demolished to construct newer, larger ones and older outbuildings were being repurposed into secondary dwellings. The majority of new homes were one- or one-and-one-half-stories with associated outbuildings and stables or (towards the end of the period), automobile garages. Many of the residential styles and forms trending during this time period are found all around the Fort Russell neighborhood. These include the I-house, hall and parlor, Queen Anne, T-plan frame, upright and wing, and Eastlake in Phase I; and Queen Anne, Vernacular, Bungalow, Craftsman, Swiss Chalet, American Foursquare, and Prairie in Phase II. Notable examples include:
 - Michael H. Shields House (1892) (411 East B Street), is a one-and-one-half story, Queen Anne house with gable-end detailing, elaborate chimney tops, and fish scale imbrication;
 - Dwelling (ca. 1890) (318 South Howard Street), a two-story, upright and wing with a two-story, front-facing gable and a single-story side gable wing. Details include a porch fronting the wing, tall, narrow windows capped by pediments, corner boards, and crown molding;
 - Dwelling (ca. 1900) (307 North Polk Street), a one-and-one-half story, gable-oriented, Italianate with a full-width porch with a low-pitched hipped roof set atop square posts and pilasters with elaborate scroll-sawn brackets and turned wood balusters spans the façade;
 - Charles L. Butterfield House (1902-03) (403 North Polk Street), a two-story, Neoclassical dwelling with a dominant entry porch with a classical pediment, fluted, full-height, Corinthian columns and pilasters, and an upper porch with a spindled balustrade. Dormers are found on the truncated hip roof on all elevations but the façade;
 - Jerome J. Day Mansion (1904) (430 East A Street), a large, asymmetrical, Queen Anne residence with a full-height, square bay on the south elevation, a rounded southeast corner, and a full-height, three-sided bay with a turreted roof on the east elevation;

- Mark P. Miller House (ca. 1911) (325 North Polk Street), a large, two-and-one-half-story, eclectic Craftsman mansion with half-timbering, Swiss Chalet style detailing and a porte-cochere resting on blonde and red brick piers;
 - Homer David House (1912) (220 North Van Buren Street), a large, two-story, Prairie style dwelling with a low-pitched, hip roof with deep, boxed eaves with modillions, and a full-width, hip-roofed porch atop brick piers with concrete caps spanning the façade;
 - Dwelling (ca. 1920) (301 North Polk Street), a one-and-one-half story, front-gabled Craftsman Bungalow with a full-width porch under an extended gable roof atop square wood posts resting on capped-brick piers. The gables have heavy knee braces, exposed beams, exposed rafter tails, wide eaves, exposed beam ends that give the appearance of large dentils, knee braces, and wide bargeboards.
- Educational – Schools continued to be important resources proximate to the Fort Russell Historic District during this period.
 - The Ursuline Academy, no longer extant (1908) was first located in the Charles and Jenny Moore home at Howard and East D Streets. By 1920, the Academy was comprised of the dormitory, the chapel and in a separate two-story building: an auditorium, classrooms, a stage, and storage.
 - The Moscow Carnegie Library (1906) (110 South Jefferson Street) was constructed in the Mission style, designed by architect Watson Vernon of Boise, and built by Fred King Company. It is a side-gable roof, brick building with Mission style parapets on both sides as well as a parapet extending over the main entry centered on the façade. The entry is recessed behind a large, arched opening with an additional parapet. The windows are arched. It is listed individually in the NRHP.
 - The old Moscow High School (1912) was designed by Spokane architect Clarence Hubbell in the Neoclassical style. It is a two-story building set on a raised basement foundation with an H-shape plan and with gabled parapets on each of the four corner extensions and full-height entry porticos centered on the east and west elevations. A flat-roof entry porch extends out from each of these elevations, each with granite pillars, terrazzo flooring, and elaborate terra cotta ornamentation including a wide entablature and small balustrade surrounding the top. This building is now known as the Whitworth Building and is listed individually in the NRHP.
 - Ecclesiastical– The area around the Fort Russell Historic District contained growing numbers of church organizations over time. Church construction continued during this period as new, larger churches were built to replace ones deemed too small for growing congregations. A Christian Church and a Norwegian Church were built circa 1890 on East 1st Street, between South Jefferson and South Adams Streets. The First United Methodist Episcopal Church outgrew their original church and built a new one of stone at 322 E 3rd Street in 1902-04. The Swedish Lutheran church originally at Second and Van Buren Streets was moved to East 3rd and South Howard Streets in 1905. The First Methodist Church (1904) was built in the Gothic Revival style at 322 East 3rd Street and the Unitarian Universalist Church was constructed at 420 East 2nd Street in 1905.

Interwar, 1920 – 1940

Proceeding into the early years of the twentieth century, technological innovations requiring extensive mechanical systems including things such as indoor plumbing and gas hot water heaters, led to an increase in the cost of home construction. As such, the typical residence shrunk in size (as well as the residential lot it was built on) and no longer included by standard things like servant's quarters.⁴² It was also during this period, heading into the 1920s, that vehicular garages, often placed to the rear of a lot accessible via a long driveway or alley, began to gain popularity.

Following national trends, growth increased after World War I. Moscow's population rose to 5,000 by 1928. Residences began to be constructed with garages while stables, liveries and corrals were disappearing. As the decade continued, Moscow citizens began buying automobiles in increasing numbers and Highway 95, which ran through Moscow, was finally paved in 1938.⁴³

Machine shops, grocery stores with refrigerators, a telephone exchange, and automobile garages with repair shops were constructed in the downtown due to the rise in mechanization; commercial enterprises that reflected a rise in leisure activities such as movie theaters, pool and dance halls, and restaurants were also being built; and enterprises like hotels, barbers, tailors, jewelers, and smoke shops that indicated a greater discretionary income were also being constructed in during this time.

This growth was short lived, however, with the onset of the Great Depression. Construction nearly halted, farm prices dropped, and unemployment became rampant across the nation. Locally, layoffs affected the labor force at the railroad companies, lumber mills, farms, and many of the commercial enterprises in Moscow. The University of Idaho campus saw high rates of deferred building maintenance, lack of supplies, lower salaries and wages, and a drop in enrollment.

Despite the economic turmoil caused by the Great Depression during the 1930s, several federal government initiatives including the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration sought to stabilize the housing market and make home ownership a continued reality for some Americans. Suburban development dating to this period were most characteristic of the Better Homes and Small House movements emphasizing both the quality of design and construction as well as social reform. In an effort to make home construction even more affordable, industrialized methods of prefabrication and mass production began to be more commonly applied to residential construction. Dwellings built during this period tended to be even smaller and more modest than the decade prior with Bungalows continuing in popularity, though more modest, alongside Colonial Revival styles such as Dutch Colonial, English Cottage, and Tudor.⁴⁴

World War II brought another drop in enrollment at the university with a corresponding rise after the war's end. Another cycle of dropping rates of construction, increasing deferred maintenance, lower salaries and wages, and a lessening of delivered supplies were mirrored in Moscow's downtown business district and its residential neighborhoods during this period when local and national resources were utilized for the war effort.

Associated Property Types

The few houses that were built during the Depression were generally smaller and the materials used were less expensive. Multi-family residences were also being constructed during this period of moderation. The architectural trends included Bungalow, Craftsman, Vernacular, Art Moderne, Art Deco, English Cottage, and Cape Cod. Gothic Revival was a favored style for churches and educational buildings.

- Residential – During this time period, construction of residences within and around the Fort Russell neighborhood continued following national trends, deeply impacted by the Depression and World War II. They were built increasingly farther east to North Hayes Street and south to East Sixth Street, especially in the area around East City Park, filling previously platted, yet still empty plots and larger lots that had been split. Nearly all commercial enterprises were gone from this area by this time, as most commercial construction was focused more tightly along Main and Washington Streets, and to the west of Main. Some older dwellings in disrepair were demolished to construct new. The majority of new homes were compact, one-and-one-half-story dwellings with automobile garages. Some notable examples from this period include:
 - Dwelling (ca. 1930) (520 South Hayes Street), a one-and-one-half-story, side-gable Craftsman that features a full-width, hip-roofed porch supported by large, square wood posts resting on an enclosed apron. A shed-roof dormer is centered above the porch on the façade. The dwelling features classic Craftsman characteristics including wide eaves, exposed rafter tails and prominent wood brackets;
 - Dwelling (ca. 1930) (405 North Polk Street) is a one-and-one-half story, brick and shingled, cross-gabled, storybook Tudor. The façade exhibits a front gable and a smaller entry gable with a flared eave line. The entry has an arched wood door with a painted-wood inset surround with faux rustication, topped by a soldier-course brick lintel. The first story is clad in clinker brick veneer laid in an irregular, random, undulating tapestry-style bond, while the dormers and the crossing gable end are covered in wood shingles. A tapered, clinker brick chimney with the same random bond featuring an inset, arched niche is found on the north elevation;

- Dwelling (ca. 1930) (910 East First Street), an Art Moderne dwelling with a truncated hip roof and stuccoed exterior walls on the asymmetrical façade's two-story main block and single-story, flat-roofed wing. A deep, full-width balcony at the second level cantilevers slightly over the lower level creating an inset entry. The entry door is a flat-panel wood door with flanking wood-sash sidelights. To the east of the entry is a curved wall of windows. The southeast corner of the dwelling and the balcony above is clipped creating a half-wall platform at the first level with a window above.
- Apartment Building, Latah County Historical Society, Centennial Annex (1937) (327 East Second Street), a two-story building featuring a side-gabled section toward the front, and two rear facing gables on the back. It is a frame building finished with a brick veneer. It exhibits a symmetrical, three-bay (www/d/www) façade with a centered, gable roof, enclosed porch. Small forward-facing gables rise above the triplet windows on the second level;
- Dwelling (ca. 1940) (820 East First Street), a one-and-one-half story, side-gabled English Cottage with two front facing gables on the façade. The larger forward gable features stacked, multi-pane windows, and projecting from this gable is a smaller entry gable with a central entry door with fanlight glazing and pedimented trim atop fluted pilasters. The windows are tall and multi-pane. A tall, double-flue, brick chimney highlights the west elevation.
- Educational – During the Interwar period, the construction of educational facilities slowed yet still continued to play important roles in the Fort Russell neighborhood supporting the growing population.
 - John Russell Elementary School (1928) (119 North Adams Street), is one such example. It was built to replace two earlier school buildings on the same site. The original portion of the building is a generally rectangular central block, flanked by small wings creating a C-shaped plan. A rectangular wing was added at the west end of the building running parallel along A Street between 1928 and 1961. The building features a raked-brick veneer supported on a poured-concrete foundation. It exhibits elements of the Collegiate Gothic style, including cast stone surrounds around the entries, with pilasters exhibiting peaked stones at the top, and Gothic arches over both the cast stone and brick entries. Soldier course bricks serve as lintels over the windows, which also exhibit brick sills. A soldier course of blonde bricks runs around the building above the second-story windows.
 - Moscow High School (1938) (402 East Fifth Street), is another such example. It is a symmetrical Art Deco building with a long, rectangular, central block of classrooms and large wings at both ends, one the auditorium and the other the gym. The original portion of the high school is reinforced concrete construction with brick walls. The building is three stories with a grand central inset entry at the façade with a nearly two-story enframed glass door and window wall. in metal lettering is located above the entry door transom window. Tall brick pilasters bracket the entry and are capped with decorative terracotta Art Deco motifs. A wide staircase leads up to the entry. Original, metal-sash, paired windows march the length of the building's walls separated by brick pilasters capped with terracotta detail. The walls end into projecting three-story blocks with decorative terracotta detailing delineating the windows. Contrasting terracotta highlights the parapets, the bases of pilasters and the decorative cornice work with Art Deco motifs found at the façade. Decorative diaper work within the brick walls are found on both the old auditorium and the gym.

- Ecclesiastical – Although slowed slightly by the Depression, new places of worship were constructed as an uptick in worshipers required new spaces. Examples include:
 - St. Mark's Episcopal Church (ca. 1930) (111 South Jefferson Street), replaced an earlier, pre-1904 Episcopal Church in the same location. It has a single-story, cruciform plan. The main block has a gable roof, with a brick steeple extending up on the facade. A full-height, gable-roof extension is found toward the west end of the north elevation, and a small, shed-roof extension on the northeast corner. A gable-roof addition has been added to the south elevation and a flat-roof extension can be found on the rear of that addition. The building has six-row, common bond brick exterior walls. A row of soldier course bricks run atop the concrete foundation. The recessed main entry, is located beneath the steeple and flanked by angled brick walls, and features a Gothic-arched stained-glass window.
 - St. Mary's Catholic Church (1930) (321 East First Street), an L-shaped building with a large rectangular portion running east-west along East First Street, and a small extension at the northeast, rear corner. A square tower is found at the southwest corner. The church features a red brick exterior, slate or rubber tile roof, and stone detailing including sills, a water table, window trims, and cornice detailing. Additional stone detail is found on top of the buttresses and at the top of the pilasters on the tower. In addition to these details, further evidence of the building's Late Gothic Revival style includes pointed arched stained-glass windows and the restrained use of detail. A number of leaded-glass windows can also be found.

Contemporary Period

Today, Moscow boasts a population of over 24,000 with over 38,000 living in Latah County, with an impressive 12,000-plus number of students enrolled at the University of Idaho, 11,000 of those at the Moscow campus. The University of Idaho is the primary research university in state, the largest campus in the state at 1,585 acres, and enrolls more National Merit Scholars than all other institutions in the state combined.⁴⁵

Moscow, Idaho grew into the city it is today due primarily to several important driving factors: grasslands, timber, soil, railroads, a college, and the people. Settlers drawn by the fertile rolling hills of the Palouse found that the soil could support extensive agricultural production. As railroads were built into town, more settlers were drawn to the area, and the rail lines opened up distant markets and created transportation corridors to Walla Walla, Lewiston, Spokane, Portland and beyond. Moscow was chosen as the site of the land grant college, which pulled more people to the area, educated students, and assisted local farming with scientific discovery. And finally, the forward-thinking citizens who settled the area and worked hard to create a livable town, were a defining factor in the shape, the growth and the success of Moscow.

Summary

Between early development and the Interwar period, Moscow was a booming regional center of commerce, culture, and education. These periods of growth and development are readily visible in the architecture and elements of community planning retained today in the city's downtown and Fort Russell neighborhood – both of which have been recognized for their significance and representation of the city's origins and early history with NRHP district designations.

Though previously listed, the current nomination seeks to expand the existing Fort Russell district boundaries and period of significance to include additional areas and eras related to and tied closely with the original district. Having been prepared in 1980, the original nomination was limited to a 50-year period of significance extending only through 1930, however, it is readily apparent that extending the period of significance through 1940 to include the architecture and development of that additional decade, which is so pervasive both throughout the original and expanded boundaries, is appropriate. This expansion allows not only for the inclusion of interwar period dwellings including Bungalows/Craftsman, Art Moderne, and revivals like Tudors and English cottages, but for the addition of the city library and several local landmark churches and educational institutions. These resources not only enrich the district, but are a natural fit within it.

Additionally, this amendment will serve to expand upon and better define the historic contexts provided in the original nomination and solidify boundaries more clearly defined than the somewhat arbitrary boundaries provided for the original district. The buildings within the expanded Fort Russell district are tied so intrinsically to national trends in architecture and community planning, and the influence of the technological, social, and cultural innovations taking place during the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries, that as a group they become a consistent and homogeneous, locally significant representation of all of these things.

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

The boundary of the Fort Russell Neighborhood Historic District is delineated on the attached project mapping and is verbally described as follows:

The southwest corner of the expanded district is located on East Third Street, slightly east of its intersection with South Jefferson Street (just east of an empty parking lot on this corner). It proceeds north following South Jefferson Street to East Second Street extending west along Second then turning again to the north travelling up an alley between Jefferson and Washington streets. The line continues north until it reaches the rear of the property lines for those properties facing south toward East A Street, where it heads east to get back to North Jefferson Street. The line continues north to slightly south of East C Street, where it heads east-southeast to North Adams Street. The boundary continues northeasterly between East B Street and East D Street, from North Adams to North Howard Street following the rear of a variety of property lines creating a generally diagonal boundary in this area.

From North Howard and East D Streets, the boundary heads south down Howard, extending east along the line where East C Street would extend (though the street is cut off by developed property in this location). The boundary extends generally east to North Hayes Street. The boundary then continues south along North Hayes Street to the rear of the properties facing north along East B Street. It travels west along the rear of those property lines to North Lincoln Street, where it travels south to East First Street. Here it extends west back to South Hayes Street and south down to the intersection of South Hayes and East Third Streets. The boundary then turns east running along East Third Street back to the point at which it began.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundary reflects an expansion of the Fort Russell Neighborhood Historic District, to include in its entirety what Moscow residents consider to be the Fort Russell Neighborhood. The expanded boundaries include slightly later developments of the neighborhood and reflect an expanded period of significance, primarily east and south of the boundaries included in the original 1980 nomination. The areas within both the original district and the expanded boundaries are cohesive in their integrity, significance and reflection of the Fort Russell neighborhood.

Northerly boundaries are marked generally by topography, where a noted drop-off north of East D Street marks the edge of the cohesive neighborhood. The easterly boundary is generally situated at North/South Hayes Street, areas east of North Hayes are noted by more modern development unrelated to the period of significance for the Fort Russell neighborhood. The southerly boundary follows East Third Street, including those properties along the north side of the street, which are more directly related to the Fort Russell neighborhood. East Third Street represents somewhat of a division socially and chronologically as far as the residential development in this area is concerned, so those properties along the south side of the street, and further south of Third itself, are not directly related to the neighborhood historic district. The west boundary is generally marked by North/South Jefferson Street, which generally marks both the edge of the Fort Russell neighborhood and the edge of residential development. Areas west of this are primarily commercial in nature and are not related to the contexts of the district.
