

OLD IDAHO PENITENTIARY

In 1942, Idaho State Penitentiary inmates rallied around the "Champ," their prized bullfrog that lived in the prison yard's lily pond. Champ sat quietly and waited for sparrows to land for a drink of water. In a flash he gulped the birds down whole and waited for his next opponent. Champ became a legend among the prison population. They bet anything they could—money, marbles or chalk - that he could "lick" any other frog in Idaho.
