

On May 21, 1939, four inmates cut through their cells, scaled the prison wall and escaped to the mountains. In hot pursuit, veteran bloodhound Malli and his son Wrinkles took after the convicts' scent near Banks, Idaho. Malli returned to his master, Guard Jack McNeilly, but Wrinkles did not. With all four inmates found and no sign of Wrinkles, McNeilly and Malli set out to his last known whereabouts. Malli howled, and Wrinkles ran out from the woods. An Idaho Statesman reporter stated, "we're afraid Wrinkles'...proper niche is before the fireplace in the home of some maidenly lady...without subjecting himself to the grim realities which a life of first hand adventure entails."
